Course content

The course includes the analysis of several questions, focussing on critical examination of literary and documentary sources.

Examples of topics: Homer and the Egean world (homeric dialect, Homer and Anatolia, etc.); the contribution of papyrology to the Altertumswissenschaft (classical texts rediscovered, evolution of epistolary forms, etc.); the Gaulish language in the Roman empire (study of a language of fragmentary attestation, defixiones, ritual calendars).

Objectives (and/or specific learning outcomes)

The course aims at teaching problematics connected with research and a philological research methodology. The analyzed languages provide an initiation to the linguistic diversity of the Mediterranean basin.

To take into account the diachronic evolutions in the analysis of languages, literatures, and cultures. To fully understand the social functions of languages and to compare the social discourses and realities. To plan and follow the different phases of a scientific work. To be able to compose a written report.

Evaluation method(s)

Other and Oral examination

Evaluation method(s) (additional information)

Two written exercises (the first one on a philological problem, the second one on one of the topics of the course) and an oral exam for each of the three parts of the course.

Determination of the mark (including the weighting of partial marks)

The two written exercises and the average of the three oral exams represent each one third of the total mark.

The failure for any part of this course (any of the written exercises and any of the oral exams) implies a failing final grade and the obligation to present the corresponding exam again.
