Contenu du cours

This class is an interdisciplinary class exploring from a law and economics perspective the key rules regulating EU trade policy.

It explores first the institutional aspects of EU trade law (EU competence in trade, its scope, decision-making procedures, and the relationship between eu law and international law). It then looks at substantive aspects of trade law, discussing the key principles of WTO law (e.g. MFN, non-discrimination, general exceptions) and EU law (covering inter alia trade remedies and the key rules in preferential trade agreements). In doing so we also discuss the economics of trade liberalization and the key rational and economic effects of trade policy instruments. We will cover some aspects of trade in goods, trade in services, trade and domestic regulations and if time permits investments.

Objectifs (et/ou acquis d'apprentissages spécifiques)

This course aims to provide a comprehensive discussion of the economics of trade liberalization, the legal discipline of the WTO and the interplay between law and economics in this area. The students should be capable to understand the basic concepts and instruments of trade law as well as the main challenges of EU trade policy.
