Course content

The course focuses on what it means to do research in English linguistics.

- > it familiarises students with the actual published literature (this year, in sociolinguistics).
- > it familiarises students with scientific writing in linguistics.
- > it teaches students methods for doing research on a linguistic corpus.

Objectives (and/or specific learning outcomes)

The two main goals are:

1. teaching students to write a linguistics paper, which will take the form of a review of the literature relevant to a research question in sociolinguistics. The end product will look every bit like a publishable paper.
2. teaching students how to design and conduct an empirical study involving collection and analysis of corpus data, in order to answer a research question.
