Objectives (and/or specific learning outcomes)

The lecture aims to provide students with epistemological, methodological and theoretical tools for a reflexive approach to the way collective identities are constructed. We will focus on how ethnic, regional, national or transnational identities are forged, with a special interest for the process of inventing traditions (history, institutions, ceremonies, heritage, etc.), and for the way this process legitimizes these identities through reference to cultural contents. Case studies will be taken from many subcontinental contexts to illustrate both the universality of the issue, and the need to develop an approach sensible to the diversity and the specificity of each historical and regional context.

Teaching method and learning activities

Lecture ex cathedra (2 x 2 hours/week from mid-September to the end of October). Reading of texts and presence to conferences by guest scholars are both mandatory, and necessary for the exams. The lecture itself will present critically the different ways to approach ethnicity and nationalism in an anthropological perspective. Case studies are taken from all over the world, with a focus on sub-Saharan Africa and South-East Asia.

Evaluation method(s)

Other

Evaluation method(s) (additional information)

Written examination in French or English.

Determination of the mark (including the weighting of partial marks)

The exam is made up of three open questions (with the same ponderation for the final mark) about the lecture ex cathedra, the mandatory readings, and the conferences. Grading takes into consideration the capacity for synthesizing specific issues discussed during the course, the capacity to link different chapters and ideas, and the ability to analyze specific cases basing on the methodological and theoretical tools provided during the lecture.
