Objectives (and/or specific learning outcomes)

The course explores (some of) the social forces that produce contemporary urban space. It aims at challenging mainstream representations reducing urban issues to management problems (how to?) by bringing to the forefront the deeply political nature of urban issues (for/against whom? who decides?). To this end, the contours of the now-dominant configuration of capitalism (i.e. neoliberalism) and the role of major drivers of urban change (i.a. rent-seeking investors, property developers, governments and related state agencies) are brought here centre-stage. Eventually, the course makes the case for re-politicization of some pressing
