Programme's added value

Mastering multiple languages has become a key skill as a result of increasing globalisation, international communication, opening frontiers and the emergence of a vast array of new means of communication.

In order to successfully exchange information aiming to promote understanding between communities and to advance their economic, cultural and/or social development, these languages have to be thoroughly mastered. This principle also applies also to other contexts such as organisations, administrations or businesses.

The Translation and Interpretation Department at ISTI-COOREMANS offers a programme that will familiarise students with the realities of the job market. Indeed, thanks to close collaboration between researchers and professionals in the field, students learn early on in the programme to conduct themselves in a professional manner and to critically analyse and reflect on their work.

Upon graduation, students master two foreign languages in addition to French and have acquired comprehensive cultural knowledge preparing them to access other specialised programmes. The programme will also prepare students and provide them with the necessary skills to take their first steps in an ever-changing job market. To complete Block 2 of the Master's programme, students are required to undertake internships that will provide them with their first working experience.

Programme objectives

The Bachelors in Translation and Interpretation aims to develop advanced linguistic skills that enable students to accurately transfer a written or oral message from one language into another, while taking into account the specific characteristics of each language.

To this end, the first cycle leading up the bachelor's degree (totalling 180 credits), assists students in acquiring or refining their skills in two foreign languages but also in developing expert French language skills.

Upon successful completion of the Bachelors, students may access either the Masters in Translation or the Masters in Interpretation. Professional translators and interpreters will share their knowledge and experience with the students. In

Teaching methods

Classes are taught to small-sized groups with a focus on incremental learning. Most learning activities are practice-based. Regular formative evaluations are carried out to determine that the intended learning outcomes have been achieved.

International/Openness

Once they have won the 120 credits offered during their bachelor's programme in Translation and Interpretation, students are also required to take part in a student exchange programme for the duration of one semester. In practice, this means that students will be requested to choose from a list of foreign universities to study abroad. For students whose language combination includes Dutch, the Erasmus Belgica scheme allows them to do this in Flanders.

The Translation and Interpretation Department at ISTI-COOREMANS has student exchange contracts with about 150 university colleges and universities in Europe and worldwide.

Job opportunities

Upon successful completion of the bachelor's and master's programmes, graduates will be qualified to work as translators, but will also be able to use their intercultural and writing skills in a wider range of sectors.

Depending in their areas of expertise, graduates will be qualified to work in domains such as economics, finances, science, technology, law and administration.

They can also find employment in the field of media translation (sub-titling, surtitling, voice over), project management, website and video game localization, and terminology.

They are able to translate philosophical or literary texts but also art books and museum or exhibition catalogues.

Bachelor in Translation and Interpretation

The Bachelor's Degree in Translation and Interpretation covers three core strands: foreign languages, French and general knowledge. All three enable students to refine their language skills and increase their domain knowledge in order to prepare for the Master's programme in Translation or Interpretation.

The programme is designed to help students acquire advanced language skills in two foreign languages. Its courses aim to enhance students' domain knowledge through the study of a range of fields including law, economics, economic geography, history, philosophy, sociology, general science, computer science and international politics.

To conclude the first cycle, students can also further develop their language skills and gain a better insight into the cultures studied by taking part in a period of study abroad.

The programme prepares students to translate and interpret in a variety of professional contexts.
