

Master in History of Art and Archaeology : General

Focus Teaching

Much of the curriculum is devoted to personal projects (seminars, work placements, dissertation) and direct contacts with objects, images, or constructions, building on the skills acquired during the Bachelor.

Five focuses are available for the Master in Archaeology and Art History:

- > the teaching focus prepares students to work as teachers—including as art teachers—, developing skills that promote teaching such as argumentation and knowledge sharing;
- > the practical focus on archaeology prepares students to work in a professional setting, with work placements in museums, art galleries, and excavation sites;
- > the focus on art and visual culture develops the students' ability to interpret images and take into account the historical context in which they were created;
- > the focus on museums and movable heritage conservation trains students on theoretical, ethical, and practical issues related to the conservation of movable heritage and its management in museums. It teaches students to fulfil the various tasks involved in updating, analysing, and conserving tangible heritage;
- > the European focus on archaeology and pre-Colombian art completes the curriculum of students who chose the elective on American studies, with a six-month exchange period (see 'International' section).

Master in History of Art and Archaeology : General

Focus European pre-Columbian Archaeology and arts

Much of the curriculum is devoted to personal projects (seminars, work placements, dissertation) and direct contacts with objects, images, or constructions, building on the skills acquired during the Bachelor.

Five focuses are available for the Master in Archaeology and Art History:

- > the teaching focus prepares students to work as teachers—including as art teachers—, developing skills that promote teaching such as argumentation and knowledge sharing;
- > the practical focus on archaeology prepares students to work in a professional setting, with work placements in museums, art galleries, and excavation sites;
- > the focus on art and visual culture develops the students' ability to interpret images and take into account the historical context in which they were created;
- > the focus on museums and movable heritage conservation trains students on theoretical, ethical, and practical issues related to the conservation of movable heritage and its management in museums. It teaches students to fulfil the various tasks involved in updating, analysing, and conserving tangible heritage;
- > the European focus on archaeology and pre-Columbian art completes the curriculum of students who chose the elective on American studies, with a six-month exchange period (see 'International' section).
