

Master in Public Health

Focus Epidemiology and biostatic

The Master in Public Health is a master with a professional focus that prepares students to work in public health; it is suited to industrialised as well as developing countries.

Students in this programme can choose one of four specialisations. The common core includes courses totalling 60 credits -including internships, interdisciplinary seminars, and master thesis- and specialised courses to be chosen in one of the four following orientations:

- > Biostatistics and epidemiology
- > Health services management
- > Health systems policies and health promotion
- > Environmental health

The focus on health systems management offers three options: health services management, nursing unit management, and clinical nursing sciences.
